National Egg Products School Registration Open

Sept. 10 - 13, 2018, University of Georgia, Athens

Chicago, IL, (June 29, 2018) – The National Egg Products School, sponsored by the University of Georgia, Department of Poultry Science and the American Egg Board, is now open for registration. The biennial, four-day program gives attendees an in-depth farm to fork review of eggs and egg products, including hands-on sessions, exploring the innate functionality of eggs. The course material covers eggs from their initial formation all the way through to packaging for industrial use. The program is intended for those involved in the egg industry, egg processing, allied industries and foodservice (including bakers, food formulators and chefs.)

In addition to egg basics, students will learn about troubleshooting processing, egg safety, regulations, safe handling and storage from a faculty of academics and industry experts.

Topics agenda:

- Egg products and labeling
- Egg products marketing
- Egg functionality and product formulations labs (hands-on activities)
- Regulatory update on FDA egg rule and Egg products
- Egg and egg products microbiology
- Food safety and quality program auditing
- Food Safety Modernization Act – relevance to the egg industry
- Unit operations for egg processing
- Equipment and plant design
- Update on egg nutrition research
- Supply chain challenges

Workshop attendance is limited to 50 participants. For questions regarding the National Egg Products School, contact Jeniece Vinson at jgvinson@uga.edu or 706-542-1371. To
